Philosophy and Approach: People seek counseling when life's problems and issues seem overwhelming and they wish to make changes. I will help to facilitate the process of change working with the client to improve a life situation. The process may include problem solving, self-reflection, homework and challenging the client in ways that might feel uncomfortable. Clients will be asked to explore feelings and concerns, while identifying areas of change. My theory of orientation is Solution Focused Therapy, where I help to direct conversation with the clients toward developing and achieving their vision of solutions. I work with individuals, couples and families. When working with young clients I may use Play therapy. Filial Therapy may be used to help teach parents new ways of working with their young children. Sandtray Therapy working with miniatures to create scenes of an issue or problem can be done with both individuals of any age and or family groups. All parties will need to have a commitment of time, energy and to actively participate in the counseling process.

Formal Education: I hold a Bachelors degree in Social and Behavior studies from George Fox University. I am currently enrolled as a Masters student in Marriage, Couple and Family Counseling at George Fox University.

Memberships: I hold Student memberships in American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy (AAMFT), and Association for Play Therapy (A4PT)

As a Student Intern of the Oregon Board of Licensed Professional Counselors and Therapists, I will abide by its Code of Ethics. I will be under ongoing supervision, provided by both the faculty of George Fox University and have on site supervision at Life Skills Learning Institute. I am happy to explain the supervision process upon request.
